Technical Tip

Before 'laying up ' your car for the winter, it is worth checking the strength of the antifreeze. This can be done with a simple hydrometer (available from Amazon etc). Antifreeze should be replaced every two years and the system flushed out. However be aware that there are two types of antifreeze:

Cars made after 1998 normally need antifreeze that uses silicate-free, organic acid technology (OAT). Older cars require antifreeze like Blucol which is now called Inorganic Additive Technology (IAT) which is Glycol based.

(OAT should not be used in classic/historic cars because it will degrade the solder joints in old / original radiators and will affect sealants such as Hylomar, and also real rubber hoses. OAT is also supposed to be worse for highlighting any small leaks, although it offers better corrosion protection in modern engines.)
The two types of antifreeze should not be mixed as there may be a reaction between the two.
